Chief Commissioner's Message

The Canadian Human Rights Commission's 2018–19 Departmental Plan centres on our core commitment: Putting people first in everything we do.

Last year was a milestone year for the Commission. We marked 40 years since the Canadian Human Rights Act was enacted by Parliament. The anniversary provided us an opportunity to look back on how far human rights have come in Canada in 40 years, and it offered an opportunity to gather our partners and stakeholders together to look “beyond labels” and to consider the future of human rights in Canada. We heard that the Commission needs to do more to facilitate access to justice for the most vulnerable populations of our country. To help ease the burden on complainants, we have committed to making the complaint process simpler and easier to access. A first step towards this objective was the creation of a Registrar office. This led to a reduction of the intake processing time by 25%. We also created an online screening function and complaint process, allowing complainants to be directed to the proper channel and to access our services promptly, when they experience discrimination. We will continue to explore ways, in this coming year, to simplify and make it easier for complainants to understand the complaint process.

The human rights landscape is constantly evolving, and has become a focal point of debate and discussion in our society. The Commission must continuously adapt in order to better serve Canadians and, in particular, those living in the most vulnerable circumstances. This report will help shed light on our three important objectives:

- 1 Create an efficient and accessible complaint process: Greater awareness about human rights has led to an increase in the volume, complexity, and at times, the adversarial nature of complaints received by the Commission. This, coupled with an increase in complaints due to the greater accessibility of the online complaint process, has introduced even more stress into a process that was already experiencing pressures. The Commission has started the year with an internal re-organization that will see greater flexibility and resources diverted to the complaint process to help alleviate these stresses.
- 2 Be a leader that brings people together and gives a voice to those living in the most vulnerable circumstances: As we work with human rights defenders across Canada, we continue to hear stories that require us to expand our thinking when it comes to human rights. With this in mind, we will continue to be more proactive, more vocal and take on a greater leadership role in setting the human rights agenda in Canada, which will focus on two key areas –hate and intolerance, and economic, social and cultural rights. We also continue to hear of the struggles faced by women, by Indigenous people, by people with disabilities, and by visible minorities to obtain just and equitable representation in the federally regulated workforce. The Commission will soon introduce new horizontal audits – industry-wide audits – that will help shine a light on specific gaps in workforce representation within a particular industry.

3 Reinforce and modernize the corporate structure responsible for service delivery: Nothing is possible without a solid foundation in infrastructure. Through the challenges of limited resources and increased demand for our help, the Commission’s team has remained dedicated to fully protect and promote human rights in Canada.

It is an honour to present this plan for our upcoming work, and we are hopeful that it will be met with the full support of Parliament.

Marie-Claude Landry, Ad. E.
Chief Commissioner

Plans at a Glance

The Commission must continue to evolve and adapt in order to face the important challenges taking place in our human rights work. One specific challenge revolves around complaints. While a number of changes and initiatives have led to progress, our complaints caseload is still increasing, creating considerable stress on the organization. With that in mind, the Commission will move forward with an internal re-organization that will see greater flexibility and resources diverted to the complaint process to help alleviate these stresses. As well, over the next fiscal year, the Commission will simplify and modernize its complaint process by testing new approaches to make it more user-friendly and efficient. The Commission will also continue to work to reduce the backlog and decreasing the time the Commission takes to resolve a complaint. Finally, the Commission will continue to implement an approach that identifies complaints that require priority status, due to a number of factors including the systemic nature of the complaint or the vulnerability of the complainant.

The Commission strives to provide a national voice for equality in Canada and promote and protect human rights. More and more, the Commission is being called upon to lend its expertise and our leadership to help advocate for those living in vulnerable circumstances. In 2018–19, the Commission will continue to use its expertise to raise awareness of current and emerging human rights issues that affect Canadians, by informing them of their human rights and responsibilities. We will also make sure that human rights issues are part of the public debate and the national agenda. In addition, the Commission will invest time in raising public awareness of the barriers people are facing when seeking access to human rights justice. We will continue to build alliances with key stakeholders to strengthen human rights. The strategy will also support the work of the Commission by ensuring that the most vulnerable have access to our complaint process. The Commission will also develop Action Plans for two priority themes: Hate and Intolerance, and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in order to raise awareness of the issues, and engage stakeholders in order to call for action.

The Commission will continue its work in modernizing the way we support members of the four designated groups under the Employment Equity Act and employers seeking advice on employment equity issues. In 2018–19, the Commission will test a new audit model that focuses on systemic issues facing designated group members. This move intends to increase the impact of employment equity audits by identifying barriers and measures through issue-based audits. In addition, scorecards on equality in the workplace for all designated groups will be sent to employers annually. Finally, equality reports will be produced looking at how members of the four designated groups fare in terms of selected employment indicators.

For more information on the Commission's plans, priorities and planned results, see the "Planned results" section of this report.

Planned results: what we want to achieve this year and beyond

Core Responsibilities

Engagement and Advocacy

Description

Provide a national credible voice for equality in Canada – my Canada includes everyone; promote broadly human rights in Canada by raising public awareness of human rights issues; and engage civil society, governments, employers and the public in dialogue and action to affect human rights change.

Planning highlights

As Canada's national human rights institution, the Commission should be a go-to source of human rights expertise. To this end, the Commission will continue to be more proactive, more vocal and take on a greater leadership role in setting the human rights agenda in Canada. Through strategic partnerships and alliances, we will continue to monitor evolving human rights issues. We will raise awareness and serve as a bridge between government and civil society by acting in the public interest. More specifically, in 2018–19 and the subsequent fiscal year, the Commission will:

- Develop and implement an advocacy strategy on access to justice that will focus on: 1) raising public awareness and understanding of the barriers to access to justice that individuals in vulnerable circumstances are facing, and 2) ensuring that people in vulnerable circumstances can access the Commission's complaints process and be supported in navigating that process.
- Develop Action Plans for two priority themes: Hate and Intolerance, and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. In doing so, the Commission will expand its understanding of the issues, raise awareness and engage stakeholders.

- Continue monitoring and reporting on how well Canada is meeting its international human rights obligations.

Canadian Human Rights Complaints

Description

Provide people in Canada with a mechanism to file human rights complaints and remedies to victims of discrimination; reduce instances of systemic discrimination; and represent the public interest in legal cases to advance human rights in Canada.

Planning highlights

In 2018–19, the Commission will continue to work on delivering a simpler, more user-friendly and efficient complaints process for Canadians that is driven by people's needs. We will continue to tailor our services to those who need our help, rather than asking them to adapt to the way we work. At the same time, we will work to reduce the accumulated caseload and cut the time it takes to process a complaint, by exploring and testing new approaches and moving resources into complaints processing.

More specifically, the Commission will:

- Continue to expedite complaints currently under investigation.
- Pilot a new complaint processing model to reduce the overall processing time of each incoming complaint or submission the Commission receives.
- Continue refining and building upon the Commission's online complaint process, which was modernized and introduced to the public at the end of fall 2017.
- Improve communications with Canadians through various modes of e-communication such as e-mail communication and digitization of complaints.

- Explore ways to more rapidly assess if the alleged discriminatory event falls within the mandate of the Commission.
- Fully implement its prioritization approach: files will be processed and assigned based on priority status.

Employment Equity Audits

Description

Ensure employer's compliance with employment equity statutory requirements; encourage employers to identify barriers to employment and implement best practices to eliminate gaps in the representation of women, visible minority groups, Aboriginal peoples and persons with disabilities.

Planning highlights

The Commission wants to modernize the way it serves and supports employers looking for guidance on how to comply with the requirements of the Employment Equity Act. In 2018–19 and the subsequent fiscal year, the Commission will be testing a new audit model that will focus on systemic issues faced by designated groups members. Each audit will include a gender-based lens to better understand the situations and experiences of women across designated groups. It will also include a diversity and leadership lens to promote a higher representation of designated group members in management. These issue-based audits will increase the impact of employment equity audits by identifying barriers and measures across sectors/industries.

More specifically, the Commission will:

- Launch and test an issue-based audit as a pilot;
- Complete audits under the current tier approach;
- Introduce scorecards on equality in the workplace for all designated groups to federally regulated employers across Canada and test the feasibility of adding a human rights complaint component;
- Produce an equality report looking at how members of the four designated groups fare in terms of selected employment indicators; and
- Develop and publish an annual Employment Equity Risk and Issue Based Forward Plan.

Internal Services

Description

Internal Services are those groups of related activities and resources that the federal government considers to be services in support of programs and/or required to meet corporate obligations of an organization. Internal Services refers to the activities and resources of the 10 distinct service categories that support Program delivery in the organization, regardless of the Internal Services delivery model in a department. The 10 service categories are: Management and Oversight Services; Communications Services; Legal Services; Human Resources Management Services; Financial Management Services; Information Management Services; Information Technology Services; Real Property Services; Materiel Services; and Acquisition Services.

Planning highlights

Successful implementation of on-going activities and major projects is critical for the Commission to position itself for innovation and success. The Commission needs a modern, sustainable and adaptable system that allows Canadians to access human rights justice through multiple access points and that allows Commission employees’ to work more effectively.

In 2018–19, the Commission will continue its work on improving access to human rights for Canadians through the use of technology. We will continue to invest in Information Technology and renew our outdated infrastructure. We will also work with the program areas to improve and automate business processes by renewing and developing new applications.

The Commission will develop new Information Technology business solutions that are modern, mobile and support the Commission employees' efforts to work smarter and solve problems more efficiently, in collaborative and innovative ways. The Commission will continue to leverage IT solutions to develop its electronic complaint submission tool and enhance Canadian's confidential access to human rights.

Finally, the Commission will invest to renew its Information Technology security program. We will continue to improve our cyber security posture by improving security governance and implementing new automated security tools.

Future-Oriented Condensed Statement of Operations

The Future Oriented Condensed Statement of Operations provides a general overview of the Canadian Human Rights Commission's operations. The forecast of financial information on expenses and revenues is prepared on an accrual accounting basis to strengthen accountability and to improve transparency and financial management.

Because the Future Oriented Condensed Statement of Operations is prepared on an accrual accounting basis, and the forecast and planned spending amounts presented in other sections of the Departmental Plan are prepared on an expenditure basis, amounts may differ.

A more detailed Future Oriented Statement of Operations and associated notes, including a reconciliation of the net cost of operations to the requested authorities, are available on the Commission's website.
